The Human Condition Writings of Mark Twain

Keith J Maxwell, October 2026

Humorous Examples Drawn from the Writings of Mark Twain

This refined summary draws from Mark Twain's novels, essays, autobiography (the full "100-year" edition released starting 2010), and other works. For each trait, a brief description is followed by a humorous or illustrative quote or story example.

Core Framework from What Is Man?

Twain's later deterministic view: man is a machine driven by the need for self-approval. All actions serve this master impulse.

> "From his cradle to his grave a man never does a single thing which has any FIRST AND FOREMOST object but one—to secure peace of mind, spiritual comfort, for HIMSELF." — What Is Man?

Selfishness and the Drive for Self-Approval

Even noble acts ultimately content the actor's own spirit.

> "A man cannot be comfortable without his own approval." — Essays / maxims

> In Tom Sawyer, Tom turns the chore of whitewashing the fence into a coveted privilege by making it seem exclusive and desirable. The other boys pay him for the "privilege" of doing his work—illustrating how people act to satisfy their own desire for status and enjoyment.

Malice and Cruelty

Man uniquely inflicts pain for pleasure and kills for fun or revenge.

> "Of all the animals, man is the only one that is cruel. He is the only one that inflicts pain for the pleasure of doing it." — What Is Man? and related writings

> In Huckleberry Finn, Huck observes after the tar-and-feathering of the Duke and King: "Human beings can be awful cruel to one another." The mob's gleeful cruelty is presented with Twain's characteristic dark humor.

Hypocrisy and Concealment

People hide their true nature; civilization is largely the art of concealment.

> "Everyone is a moon and has a dark side which he never shows to anybody." — Following the Equator (Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar)

> "Civilization largely consists in hiding human nature. When the barbarian learns to hide it we account him enlightened." — Notebooks

In Huckleberry Finn, the "respectable" townsfolk who own slaves and attend church are constantly exposed as hypocritical through Huck's innocent observations.

Cowardice

Most people suppress true beliefs and choose the safe path.

"There are several good protections against temptations, but the surest is cowardice." —

Following the Equator "We all live in the protection of certain cowardice which we call our principles." — Notebooks

Huck's famous decision to "go to hell" rather than betray Jim is presented as rare courage against a society that prefers comfortable conformity.

Ingratitude

Helping a man often leads to being bitten in return.

"If you pick up a starving dog and make him prosperous, he will not bite you. This is the principal difference between a dog and a man." — Pudd'nhead Wilson

This maxim is classic Twain: the contrast with dogs is delivered with dry, deadpan humor that underscores human ingratitude.

Envy, Status-Seeking, and Deification of Success

Success is worshiped; failure is scorned. People always find someone to look down on.

"Human nature is the same everywhere; it deifies success, it has nothing but scorn for defeat." — Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc

"Doesn't make any difference who we are or what we are, there's always somebody to look down on." — "3,000 Years Among the Microbes"

In Tom Sawyer, Tom's social standing rises dramatically once he is rich; the same boy who was a nuisance is suddenly admired.

The Human Condition Writings of Mark Twain

Keith J Maxwell, October 2026

Limited Free Will and Environmental Determinism

Temperament and circumstances largely determine actions; free will is limited.

Man is "moved, directed, commanded, by exterior influences—solely." — What Is Man?

Huck's moral growth is shaped more by his experiences on the river and with Jim than by Sunday-school training. Society's "conscience" pulls one way; experience and the heart pull another.

Attraction to the Forbidden (Cultural American trends away from traditional legacy behaviors)

People desire things simply because they are prohibited.

"Adam was but human—this explains it all. He did not want the apple for the apple's sake, he wanted it only because it was forbidden. The mistake was in not forbidding the serpent; then he would have eaten the serpent." — Following the Equator

In Tom Sawyer: "To promise not to do a thing is the surest way in the world to make a body want to go and do that very thing." The boys' fascination with piracy, smoking, and forbidden company illustrates the point.

Pathos and the Source of Humor

Human frailty is the root of both comedy and tragedy.

"Everything human is pathetic. The secret source of Humor itself is not joy but sorrow. There is no humor in heaven." — Following the Equator

Twain's humor often arises from the gap between people's pretensions and their actual behavior—seen throughout Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer.

Blushing and Moral Awareness

Man alone blushes, which reveals both awareness and the capacity for wrongdoing.

"Man is the only animal that blushes. Or needs to." — Following the Equator

Delivered as a maxim in the style of Pudd'nhead Wilson, this line captures Twain's blend of wit and judgment in a single sentence.

Additional Notes

Twain's fiction frequently dramatizes these traits through boyhood adventures (Tom Sawyer's schemes, Huck's moral conflicts) while his later philosophical writings state them more directly and pessimistically. The humor softens the critique but does not cancel it.

Sources include What Is Man?, Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, Following the Equator, Pudd'nhead Wilson, notebooks, and the Autobiography of Mark Twain (2010–).